QUESTIONS & ANSWERS

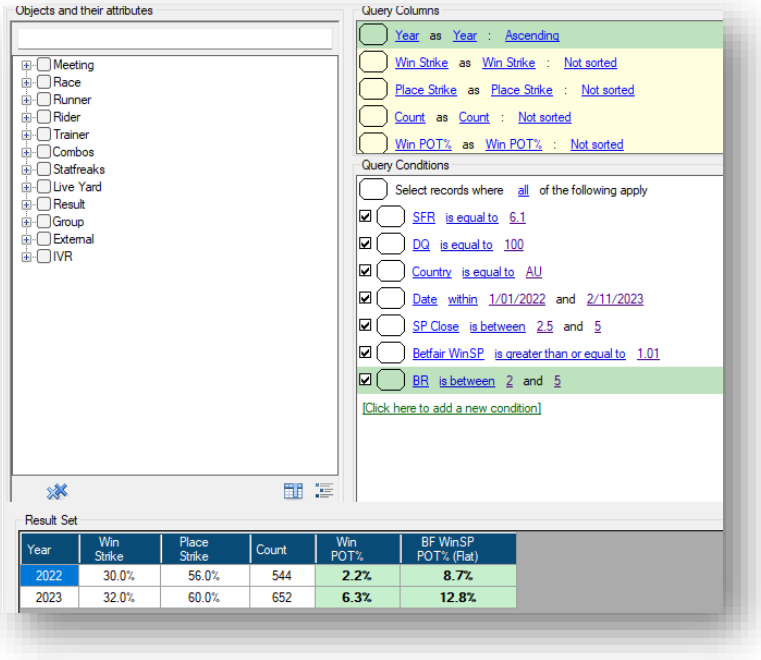
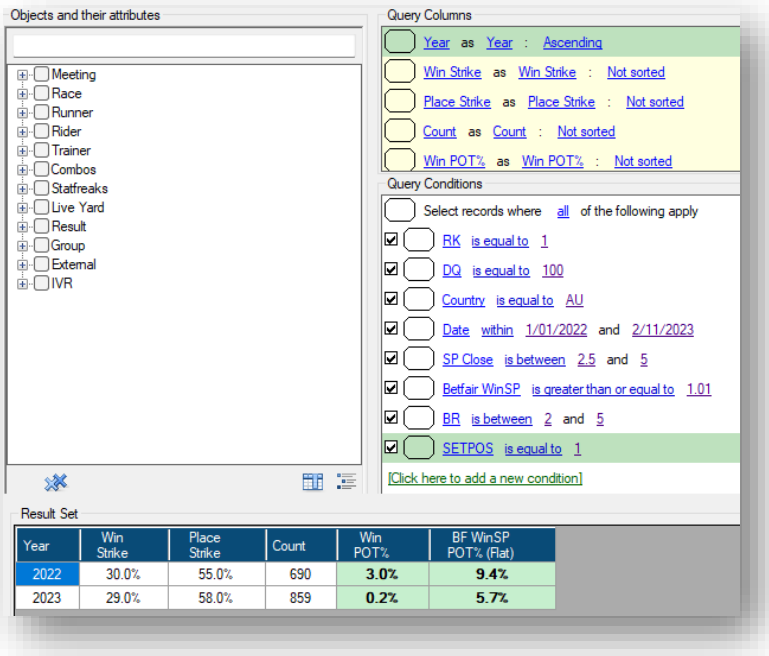
Have there been any profitable models that have used the "BR" barrier rating factor in Statfreaks data?

Two effective strategies have emerged from our "Barrier Rating/Rank" since 2022. While the top-ranked barrier (Barrier rank 1) often faces over-betting, diminishing its value, rated barriers ranked 2nd to 5th have historically demonstrated better returns.



Year	Win Strike	Place Strike	Count	Win POT%	BF WinSP POT% (Flat)
2022	30.0%	56.0%	544	2.2%	8.7%
2023	32.0%	60.0%	652	6.3%	12.8%



Year	Win Strike	Place Strike	Count	Win POT%	BF WinSP POT% (Flat)
2022	30.0%	55.0%	690	3.0%	9.4%
2023	29.0%	58.0%	859	0.2%	5.7%

It is advisable to employ these filters to identify potential winners and then conduct a manual review of each runner. By selectively removing those you deem less likely to win, you can refine the strategy and enhance the model's overall success rate.

It appears that after 12 runs in a current prep, the likelihood of a win diminishes significantly. Most contenders hit their peak performance around their 4th to 5th race and generally start to show a decline in form thereafter. Additionally, there's a noticeable drop in success for horses starting from barriers beyond the 12th position.

When it comes to staying races, such as the Melbourne Cup, our analysis indicates that the "TR" Trainer rating is a critical factor. We advise that for such races, greater emphasis should be placed on the Statfreaks "TR" ranking when assessing the potential outcomes.
